Natural History Sojourn in the San Juan Islands

Saturday, September 25th

Join our guest on-board naturalist, David Drummond, for an insightful and lively look at the bio-synergies of the San Juan Archipelago. This fascinating foray will unveil the cultural and natural wonders of the unique island ecology through surface searches, intertidal meander, upland walking and interactive discussions with you, our guest explorers! We look forward to sharing our novel and innovative approach to regional eco-education. Call today for this "last of the summer" limited sailing!

About David Drummond

David Drummond is an Ornithologist, and Wildlife biologist. David's enthusiasm and expertise has opened numerous hearts and minds to natural and cultural history around the world. This "gift for guidance" and passion for travel has found him working with small cruise ships and land tours, leading groups researching the bio-synergies of the Antarctic, South to North Pacific Islands, Canadian High Arctic, Northwest and Continental America, Central and South America, Caribbean, Svalbard, Greenland, Iceland, Europe and Israel ecosystems. His B.S. in biology/environmental studies included a minor in cultural history at Western Washington University. He wakes up with the birds and a "quest to know and share" everyday!

Mr. Drummond is also founder, executive director and principal investigator with the non-profit Merlin Falcon Foundation's Coastal Forest Merlin Project. This passionate and dedicated 26 year pioneering bio-ecological study in Washington, British Columbia and Alaska is providing invaluable conservation stewardship insights on this uncommon raptor.
